

April 6, 2006

Does a Wal Mart Bank serve the community with a variety of loans for local services and construction or will it be controlled by a central bureaucracy designed to drive other local banks that do provide service out of business?

A Wal Mart Bank would subvert local economies by diverting capital and not work locally. The Wal Mart concept is to acquire control of business by driving out competition...that is bad for local loans and lending competition. WalMart has not treated its employees fairly (no benefits, long hours, no over time, unfair to women) and there is no guarantee they would have fair hiring or give fair loans based on need.

I see no reason to grant additional power to a corporation that has abused its current commercial power and fought laws for fair labor and commercial practice.

David Greene